THE SECOND HUSBAND.

We often see young men in the gayety of youth, resolve against marrying while they enjoy health and spirits; and we as often see, that some unforeseen accident disconcerts all their fine resolutions.

So it was with Julius de Mersaint—Young, rich, handsome, possessing all the advantages of life, he was positively determined that as long as he was able to enjoy them, he would remain a bachelor. It would be time enough to think of marriage when he was tired of amusement. In consequence of this resolution, he had courageously resisted the numerous attacks that had been made on him. The kind attention of the mamma who had marriageable daughters; the pretty airs of the young ladies themselves, had all been met with equal indifference. But at last he met with a widow, and matters took a different turn. A widow is a two-edged sword; the most adroit master of fence can hardly escape a wound in such an encounter. Julius thought he might trifle with the lady, and found himself in love before he was in love. He had engaged himself too far to retreat; but he found it no difficult matter to resign himself to his fate. "After all," thought he, "what can I do better than to marry a woman who is young, pretty, rich, amiable, and irreproachable in her character? It is every way an excellent match! So the project of celibacy was thrown to the winds, and the lady suffered herself to be persuaded to renounce the state of widowhood.

Soon after the wedding, a friend of Julius arrived from a journey, and came to see the bridegroom.

"I am glad to see you," said the latter.

"Of course you come to congratulate me."

"Not at all," said Frederic. "You know how sincere I am. I should have advised you not to marry; but since that step cannot be recalled, I shall content myself with saying it a very imprudent one."

"What do you mean?" exclaimed Julius; you cannot have heard anything against my wife."

"Oh, not by no means. During her first husband's life, she lived chiefly in Paris. Since she has been a widow and returned to society, she has not given the least occasion for slander. I am happy to do her that justice. In fact, I know no fault that can be found with her except her having been a widow. It is that fact, my friend, that constitutes your impediment."

"Really, Frederic, I thought you had more sense. You are rather too sentimental."

"No, it is not as a matter of sentiment that I object to it. Did you know the late Mr. Doligny?"

"No, I did not."

"Then you do not know who you have married."

"I know I have married a charming woman, only twenty-five years old, who is perfectly amiable, and whom, notwithstanding your odd notions, I am sure you will be delighted with, though she has had the misfortune of being a wife during four years."

"I admire the tight manner in which you treat so serious an affair; you marry a woman who has come to the years of discretion, without considering in the least what sort of an education she has received from her first master, or caring what responsibilities this reign of four years entails on you."

"Indeed, I am not afraid of the past."

"Then do you know something about Mr. Doligny; you have heard what was his character, his temper, his habits?"

"No, I have seen nobody who knew much about him; but there hangs his portrait in that handsome frame, look at it."

"Why, I must acknowledge that the dear deceased was not very handsome—In that point you have a decided advantage over him. Still, that may not be sufficient. There are some men who can make their wives forget their ugliness; and that very fact that quiets your alarms, is perhaps exactly what ought to excite them."

"Well, I intend to be a good husband. I shall endeavor to make my wife happy; what more can be expected?"

"I do not know what may be expected. But why is that portrait still there? When the reign is concluded, and the interregnum past; when the people have cried the king is dead, long live the king, is the usual custom to transfer the emblem of defunct royalty, either to the lumber-room or the garret?"

"What! a painting like that! done by one of the first masters. We preserve it as a work of art, without reference to the original, who is dead and out of the way."

CYNTHIANA, KY., SEPTEMBER 13, 1866.

NO. 27.

"I hope that you may find that he is."

"Why, you do not believe in ghosts? I believe ghosts sometimes come when they are called, and I believe the apparition of a first husband is very apt to be in the way of the imprudent man who has ventured to take his place."

The next day, the two friends took a ride together. On their return, Frederic requested Julius to go with him into the cemetery, saying with a solemn air, "The living ought to take lessons from the dead." They walked through several rows of tombstones, with cypresses drooping over them, till Frederic stopped and pointed out an inscription to his friend.

"Here rests John Joseph Aristides Doligny; the best of men, and the model of husbands. His inconsolable widow has raised this monument to his memory."

"That inconsolable," observed Derville, "is an honor to you, for you have triumphed over an eternal sorrow. But the lesson to which I would call your attention is comprised in the preceding line: 'The best of men, and the model of husbands.' Mark what I tell you, this epitaph will be repeated to you, and this funeral eulogium held up to you as a rule of conduct from which you may not depart without exposing yourself to witness regrets which will not be very flattering to you; and to see your wife once more become an inconsolable widow. You smile, you do not believe?"

"How can I? am I not the happiest of husbands?"

"Certainly, at this period of your marriage; you may expect to enjoy the honey-moon as everybody else does; only in the case of a widow, this moon is sometimes curtailed of its fair proportions and only last two or three weeks."

"Really, Frederic, if you were not such an old friend, I should quarrel with you."

"I should not be surprised if you did."

Julius went home and dined alone with his wife. As he looked on her face, and listened to her agreeable conversation, he thought of the ridiculous fears of his friend.

"Poor Frederic!" said he to himself, "he certainly means kindly, but he is strangely mistaken."

His wife interrupted his meditations by asking if he had not been out riding that morning.

"Yes, my dear, I took a ride while you were with your mother."

"And I believe you had a friend with you?"

"Yes, Frederic Derville, a charming young man."

"Charming! oh, I do not doubt that. But I have heard of the gentleman; and between you and I, that intimacy is one which I think is no longer suitable for you."

"Not suitable! why?"

"Why, do you not think that a single man sometimes has acquaintances, whom it is as well to give up when he marries?"

"Certainly; but Frederic is a man of honor, and incapable."

"Oh! I dare say! but I can only judge from what I hear, Mr. Frederic Derville would be an improper acquaintance for me, and you would not keep up an acquaintance with a person whose character I cannot approve."

"But, my love, when you become acquainted with Frederic, you will become convinced of your prejudices."

"I shall not become acquainted with him, I assure you."

"Is it possible, melia? an old friend of your husband's?"

"If you choose still to consider him as such, I cannot certainly prevent it; but, at least, I trust you will refrain from introducing to my acquaintances a person whose character I cannot approve."

"I hope we are not going to quarrel so soon."

"I certainly do not wish to do so, but must confess I did not expect so much opposition to a very reasonable request. But I have been deceived by the past."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that, when Mr. Doligny married me, he made no difficulty in giving up any of his old companions; and that the moment I had expressed my disapprobation of any person, he broke with him immediately."

"Julius could not answer. 'He name of Doligny had proved that Frederic was not altogether mistaken; and the honey-moon had not yet completed but half its course."

The cloud, however, soon passed away from the face of the fair planet. A little time, and this unpleasant scene was forgotten, and the bridegroom again revelled in his visions of perfect happiness, when one day his wife said to him:

"My dear, winter is drawing near; have you thought of our box at the opera, and the Italian theater?"

"What box, my love?"

"You know how fond I am of music. I know that you sing like an angel."

"Then surely the angel must have at least once a week box at the opera, and the Italian theater."

"Why, I am not quite sure that our fortune will allow of such indulgence."

"Mr. Doligny had precisely the same income as you; and in his time, I had a box every Monday at the opera, and every Saturday at the Italian theater. There was the phantom of the first husband coming a second time, to disturb the comfort of poor Julius; he could not resolve to appear less generous than his predecessor, so he consented to hire both boxes."

In another respect he was obliged to imitate Mr. Doligny; he saw Frederic but seldom, and almost by stealth. "I do not ask you to come to our house," said he, "I can offer you so little pleasure. We live very much alone, we see no company—you would find us very dull."

"Don't trouble yourself to apologize," said his friend with a smile, "it is not you, but Mr. Doligny, who refuses to welcome me."

Mme. de Mersaint was not only one of the prettiest women in Paris but one of the best dressed. The expense in that particular was enormous. Her husband observed one day, with a manner that was but half agreeable, "You appear frequently in new dresses."

"Is that a complaint, or a reproach?" asked the lady.

The poor husband made no reply, and the lady continued:

"Mr. Doligny always liked to see me outline the best dressed woman in the company; he never thought his wife could be too much adorned."

Presently the bills came in, and very long bills they were. That of the milliner, in particular, presented a frightful amount. Julius could not refrain from expressing some surprise.

"What, cried he, such a sum for nothing but flowers, feathers and ribbons?"

"Do you think it much?"

"What do you think yourself?"

"Really, I never had occasion to think about it. Mr. Doligny never made any remarks about such details. The bills were presented, and he paid them, and I heard no more about it."

The visits of the apparition were becoming more frequent. At first he only appeared at intervals; but he ended by taking complete possession of the house. He was always present; was brought in on every occasion, consulted in every debate, there was no appeal from his decisions. He ruled his successor with a rod of iron. At last he thought fit to introduce another inmate into the family, in the person of a young officer of hussars, a cousin of the lady.

"I hope," said Madame de Mersaint, "that you will treat my cousin Edward as Mr. Doligny used to. He is a very considered our house as his home when he had leave of absence."

The tyranny of the ghost was really becoming insupportable; the only consolation Julius had, was to complain in secret to his friend Frederic.

"Ah! said he to him, 'you were quite right! Mr. Doligny does persecute me strangely; he is a most unreasonable man of conduct; and I am almost worn out with the difficulty of keeping up to it.'"

"You would not be the first who has sunk under such a task. I have known many unlucky fellows, who, like you, had thoughtlessly married widows, without knowing anything of their past lives.—Some died under the trials; the others only lived to repent; and I have heard more than one express the wish that the amiable custom of India, respecting widows had been the fashion in France."

Sometimes Julius would make an attempt at rebellion. Then Madame de Mersaint with tears in her eyes, would turn toward the portrait, and exclaim:

"Oh! my Aristides you would not thus have affected me! you loved me, and made me happy?"

How was it possible to resist that? However, one evening Julius met at a ball an old gentleman who had known Madame de Mersaint during her first marriage.

"I rejoice," said he, "to see Madame de Mersaint so happily married; she really deserves some compensation for all she suffered with her first husband."

"Suffered! my dear sir, why he was a model for all his widows! so his epitaph, and so his widow says. I try to replace him worthily, but I assure you it is a difficult matter; he was so good a husband as to spoil her for any other."

"My dear sir, it is all very proper for you and her to speak so, but I happened to know Mr. Doligny very well; I spent a great deal of my time with them at their country house."

"A beautiful place, was it not?"

"You have never been there?"

"Never."

"So I perceive."

The curtain was drawn; a new world was opening to the astonished husband. He went on from one discovery to another, and found them well worth making.

Soon after, he informed his wife that he was called from home by business; he refused to answer her inquiries on the subject.

"Business which I must not know!" Mr. Doligny never had any secrets from me."

Julius went; and on his return, found his wife in rather ill humor; at last she consented to make peace on one condition.

"What is it?"

"Take me to the waters of Baden. Mr. Doligny used often to go there with me."

"When you did not pass the summer at your delightful country house?"

"Oh! if I had a country house I should like it quite as well to go there."

"Well, here is one for you. I wanted to give you a surprise. Make your preparation; and we will set off."

"Is it far from here?"

"You shall see."

The surprise of Madame de Mersaint may be imagined, when she found herself driven up to her former country house. The husband certainly could never have found it from her description.

"My love," said he, as he landed her from the carriage, "I have bought this place to please you; you know I wish to procure you all the pleasure and indulgences which Mr. Doligny delighted to lavish upon you. And now I shall find it easy to follow his example, as I find his conduct traced by your own hand in this paper."

"My own hand!" cried his wife, alarmed.

"Yes, my love, your own hand. I received the precious document from your lawyer, with whom I have had a conference; read it."

It was a petition for separation founded on various acts of ill-treatment and cruelty, which this model of husbands had exercised towards his disconsolate widow; his death had prevented the affair from coming before the public. Madame de Mersaint cast down her eyes, and the phantom disappeared forever.

They returned to Paris. Julius opened his house to Frederic, who observed, "I have discovered the secret apparitions are only to be feared in the dark."

(From the Philadelphia Telegraph, Aug. 20.)

THE FATE OF A FALLEN WOMAN.

One of the saddest cases of suicide we have ever been called upon to report, has been committed. Many years ago, a young lady of this city, made acquaintance with the most distressing character. It appears there was a picnic at the Grove, on the bank of the Rancocas creek, a short distance above Camden—a place that has recently become the resort for rowdies, black-legs, and cut-throats. Among those present was a Miss V., residing in the northern section of the city, whose attractive countenance, genteel dress and generally prepossessing appearance, indicated that she was not only a stranger to the reckless scenes of conviviality and dissipation which are constantly occurring at the place, but that she had been the associate of the educated and refined. And such had been the case. Miss V., at a late hour in the afternoon, in company with another lady and gentleman, accepted an invitation to take a short boat trip on the Rancocas. After proceeding for some distance, and indulging in many pleasant jokes, she arose and said to her companion that she had lived long enough, and at once plunged into the creek, never to be seen alive again. She remains were found floating near Bridgeboro on the following day, and were taken to that village. As she was "unknown" the coroner took charge of the body, and had it interred in the poor ground adjoining the Methodist church of that place. A day or two afterwards, however, her father, who is a gentleman of considerable wealth and influence, had the body disinterred and recognized it as his lost daughter, allowed it to again be interred, in the same spot, in the same pauper pine box that is charitably furnished at the public expense for such bodies as are unclaimed. The history of the young girl is indeed a sad one. She was a beautiful girl, and well educated, naturally vivacious and joyful, but she was enticed from her home, and her future career is briefly told. Abandoned by her parents, despised by her other relatives, shunned by her former friends and acquaintances, deprived of her once happy and comfortable home, and denied the counsel and assistance necessary to cheer and attract her from the wrong path, it is any wonder she led a brief life of shame and found a harlot's grave?

Hamilton, of Texas, so much lauded by the Radicals, is scarcely exceeded in moral misery by his brother celebrity, Gantt, of Arkansas. The Houston Telegraph says he has been a scamp from his boyhood. In 1853 he ran for the Legislature, and was beaten on the open allegation that he was in the habit of whipping his wife. He was a violent secessionist as early as 1858, and was for separate action on the part of Texas. He was for re-opening the African slave-trade. When the late war broke out, he tried to borrow money to raise a company for the Confederate service. This is the man whom the Northern Radicals are taking to their bosoms, and whose vote for the Vice-presidency at the next election he is seeking to obtain by denouncing and slandering and cursing the people of his own State.

WAS WASHINGTON A PERJURER?—It is a favorite saying with men of the new order, that all men are perjured who, having taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, afterward joined the rebellion. George Washington and other leaders of the revolution of '76 had taken an oath of allegiance to the King of England. Did they also commit perjury?

An negro and his white wife were sent to the Cave, at Louisville, yesterday, for thus violating the martial laws of Kentucky.

SEWING MACHINES!

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

are now offering to the Public,

WILSON'S

NEW FAMILY MACHINES

FOR ONLY TWENTY DOLLARS!

It is the only First-Class Sewing Machine in the market that retails for less than $25. We present our new Machine to the Public with all the improvements that can well be combined in a sewing Machine. Great labor and pains have been bestowed on this Machine to bring it into the very highest class in the scale of Sewing Machines. It is acknowledged by the best judges to be the most perfect and most useful Machine ever invented.

Wilson's Celebrated Sewing Machine has the capacity for doing equally as well as any other machine in the market. It will stitch, knit, fell, cover, cord, bind, braid, gather and sew on the button at the same time, and with perfect ease.

It uses all the common Sewing Cottons, Green Thread, Silk, and Fine thread from the Spool, and can thread by hand (by standing at the unprecedented speed of 4,000 stitches per minute. This Machine makes the celebrated Elastic Lock-Stitch, which can be cut at frequent intervals of every stitch, and can not be worked or pulled apart.

Wilson's

NEW $20 MACHINE

Does away with our old style of Threaded Machines.

It is as large as the old Machine, and is so adapted that it will stand upon any work-table, and remain firm without fastening.

IT FEEDS THE WORK ITSELF.

And relieves the hands almost entirely, while it does the necessary of using a stand and treadle, or foot, to allow the operator to use their hands to guide the work. All those who have operated on treadle Machines, will appreciate this great improvement, as well as all the scientific Physicists, who have decided that sewing machines propelled by the feet are highly injurious to females, and should not be used more than one or two hours a day. With Wilson's Improved Machine the operator can sit erect, thus preventing pain in the back, head and chest, which are caused by the old style of Machines.

In order to introduce our Machine throughout the civilized world, we have decided to offer the following

Unprecedented Inducements:

To any one sending us Twenty Dollars, either by Draft, Postal Money Order, Express, prepaid, (which they can get at one rate), will forward one of the Wilson Sewing Machine on Trial, for two weeks, and at the end of that time, if they find the Machine is not, in every respect, just as we represented it, they can return it to us, paid through, and we will refund the money.

Send this advertisement out and send it to us, with your address and Twenty Dollars, and we will forward you a Machine by return Express, free of charge. We will accompany each Machine, from which most inexperienced will find no difficulty in learning its use.

SOUTHERN RADICAL CHIEF.

A. J. Hamilton, growing insolent by temporary prosperity, is now, true to the instincts of a depraved nature, engaged in undressing the President who has kept him in power, slandering the people who once furnished him a refuge, and who, trusting to his promises of reformation, attempted to promote him to respectability.

It is to be deplored that President Lincoln should have selected such men as Brownlow and Hamilton, to organize provisional governments in the South. The one a hypocrite in religion and blackguard in politics, and obtained a vagrant notoriety for profanity in the pulpit and defining good men, while Hamilton, destitute of every virtue, had been branded for years as a kidnapper for free negroes, the scourge of his wife, and privy to the murder of the husband, whose companion he had seduced.

Had President Lincoln known A. J. Hamilton, he would never have imposed such a mass of moral depravity on our people. A review of the career of this man, which would lay bare his character, would be too revolting for the columns of a public journal; but when we find such a man believed in his slanders and lionized in Northern cities, the cause of truth and justice should be vindicated by exposing the champion of universal suffrage. The task would since have been performed, but a respect for the position which he held, and the fear that the publication of truth would have been construed into disloyalty, has restrained us.

A. J. Hamilton, after obtaining possession of several negro children who were free, emigrated from Alabama to La Grange, Texas, about the year A. D. 1848, where he continued to reside until about 1850, when Mr. Conkwright was murdered by a hired assassin at night, under circumstances of peculiar atrocity. Dr. Conkwright, the brother of the murdered man, soon after published a pamphlet, in which he boldly charged Hamilton with first having criminal course with the murdered brother's wife and after being privy to his assassination. That pamphlet was extensively circulated in Texas, its charges believed by many citizens of La Grange, and was never responded to by Hamilton nor its author required to make atonement for publication.

The indignation existing against Hamilton at La Grange about this time was such that a soon after removed to the town of Austin, where after a time he enlisted the sympathies of the people in his behalf. But his brutal nature could not long be concealed. In 1853 it was reported and believed through the community that he was accustomed to whip his wife. In that year he became a candidate for the legislature against John W. Banks, a plain planter, who defeated him. The charge was boldly and publicly made during that canvass, by George W. Paschal, Josiah Fisk and others, who now worship with Hamilton before the black idol, that he whipped his wife. The people believed it, and he was defeated. His defeat was partially owing to another fact, which we should first have stated viz: Before the treatment of his wife became notorious, he had been elected to the legislature, and while there was charged by Judge Hancock with having received a bribe for his vote. Part of the consideration for the control of his plastic conscience was believed to be a fine horse, which he unblushingly rode with the brand of perjury on his forehead. The charge was openly and boldly made by Judge Hancock, not only once, but often, and through a series of years, and he never was called to account for it by Hamilton. Scores of witnesses, among the first men of the State, still live who have heard Judge Hancock denounce him as a perjured scoundrel on the streets of Austin.

The political aspirations of Hamilton subsided from the period of his defeat until A. D. 1858. He continued to reside in Austin, and many had leaped to doubt the record of his infamy, when a circumstance occurred, which though notorious in the neighborhood where he resides, has been before communicated to his Northern friends. Aaron Burleston, a neighbor of Hamilton, and a brother of General Ed. Burleston, of Texas revolutionary fame, in 1858, applied to a negro woman, who had been held by Hamilton as a slave, for protection. She looked weak and prostrated; stated that she had run away from Hamilton's house to avoid being beaten to death by him; that she believed she was free but had been held by Hamilton as a slave, and claimed his protection. On examination it was found necessary to dress the wounds upon her person inflicted by the lash, and so severe were they that her clothing had to be sponged from her person, and the wounds were already at work on the neglected sores. These details are revolting, but the cause of justice requires them to be stated.

Soon after this Mr. Burleston (whose social position is equal to that of any man in Texas), investigated the statements of the negro in regard to her freedom, and found they were true. Hamilton, finding that his appropriation of this woman, years before would be exposed, made no effort to obtain possession of her again. Soon afterwards she appeared in open court in Travis county, Texas, and selected a master for herself, under the law, which required free negroes to select masters, and was decreed to be his property. The record is there unto this day. Burleston still lives. The Conkwright pamphlet can still be produced. Judge Hancock, who has denounced Hamilton as a perjured scoundrel, is now in Texas, and will be our Senator; and we dare A. J. Hamilton to deny the truth of the statements as above made.

So much for the private character of the man who galvanized the sneaking Ezekiel and a few others of contemptible notoriety, and who now stands close by the bosom of his master Thaddeus, to spawn his slanders in the ears of fanatical listeners, and to traduce the true and loyal men of Texas.

The political record of Hamilton is as little understood by our Northern brethren as his private character. From A. D. 1852, until 1857, he stood almost solitary and alone, the unsoundable champion for the immediate secession of Texas, and so remained until his sudden and mysterious conversion, under the manipulation of priests who officiated in the temple of Ham. If any one denies that Hamilton was for years in favor of immediate secession, and, if necessary, of bloody revolution, to accomplish secession, on account of the intermeddling of the North with slavery, we refer him to Governor Lubbock, to Governor Reynolds, and to every prominent gentleman who resided in Austin from 1853 to 1858.

Such are a few of the antecedents of the man, who, after preaching secession for five years in the State of Texas, became treacherous to his own convictions, at the moment when they became the policy of the State—fled from our borders to fatten on our misfortunes—returned after our defeat to gloat with fiendish exultation over the graves of our kindred, and has now returned to the North, the brazen face and hired champion of slavery.

We have now discharged a public duty, too long delayed. Every statement here made we stand ready to make good by a host of creditable witnesses, and by the public records of the country.

It is due to the Northern people that they should know who this man is, who turns with pariaclal hatred against the State in which his children were born, and clamors for ruin. It is due to the Federal officers and soldiers in our midst that they should know the character of the official witness against our people who clamored for military commissions and more blood; and it is due to ourselves that we should expose the true character of this defamer of our people, whose name in Texas is the synonym of infamy.

A highly respectable gentleman of Owensboro vouches for the authenticity of the above sketch of the infamous Hamilton, and has an intimate acquaintance with most of the characters referred to, and cognizant of the facts stated.

THE GLENCOE BLOOD.—It seems that we were mistaken last week, in saying that Don Juan, the favorite horse of Gen. Custer, was the only son of imp. Glencoe ever exhibited in the State of Michigan. [Turf, Field and Farm.]

Gen. Custer's horse, indeed? As well announce to the world that the spoons and trinkets stolen by Butler in New Orleans are his favorites. But it is certainly refreshing to note the nonchalance with which the announcement is made—as if Custer had owned the horse for years, or even come by him honestly! The Virginia gentleman who bred and raised this famous horse, can probably testify to other trifles that became "Custer's" through the same procedure—open, shameless freebooting.—[So says Craddock.]

This same Custer was in command of the Division, on "Sheridan's Raid" up the valley, which done the murdering, plundering, burning and robbing. A man that would burn and destroy the lives of thousands of citizens as he did, would stoop not only to steal a blooded horse, but to plunder the dead soldier, and rob his starving wife.

The gallant Averill refused to do the bidding of Sheridan, and Grant and so cost him his Commission, but by so doing it saved his honor.

THE COMING BALL.—The recollection of the enjoyment connected with the festive occasions of last year justifies us in predicting that the Ball advertised in to-day's paper will be in all respects an occasion of elegant festivity, such as can only occur in Cynthiana, and under the management of the parties who have undertaken it.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Washington National Intelligencer thus writes:

"Governor Brownlow was seated in an open carriage, with Colonel Wm. B. Stokes, and now and then, as he was pointed out, was greeted with faint cheers. General Butler marched bareheaded, on foot, with the Massachusetts delegation. He might have passed unnoticed except that Barnum walked a short distance in front, and announced, from time to time that General Ben. Butler was just behind. This kept the General busy shaking hands with the crowd. Just after him came the New Yorkers, and here was the real interest of the procession. This delegation was actually headed by Fred. Douglass, sandwiched between Theodore Tilton, editor of the New York Independent, and Senator Ira Harris, of New York. They were followed by Dr. Garnett, (colored) and Downing, a New York colored man—genuine specimens of the genus African. As this part of the procession passed along it was cheered most heartily by negroes and whites. In fact, it was the only portion of the 'circus' that elicited grand applause.

The Selma (Ala) Messenger says that the factories are springing up all over its region of the South. The results of the war are throwing capital into a new channel. The abundance of material, easy inter-communication, equality of transportation, and for other reasons, will make Selma a great manufacturing district.

The real weakness of the disunion radicals is shown by their trepidation in the face of the great National Union demonstration. They know that the sentiment of the people is overwhelming in favor of the Union, and their only hope is that they can deceive them again.

THE CYNTHIANA NEWS, CYNTHIANA, KY.

THURSDAY, : : SEPT., 1866.

A. J. MOREY, Editor.

One among the most polite and able Conductors on the C. Ky. R. R., or any other Rail Road, is our friend James Taylor. He attends to his business and especially to the ladies, who travel with him.

The people of Harrison must not forget that the election takes place next Saturday.

We have been requested to say by our very worthy president of our Agricultural Society, David Dills, Esq., that it would be a great accommodation to the Board if the ladies would embellish the new Floral Hall with ever greens. We hope the ladies will attend to this matter immediately.

Next Tuesday our Fair begins.

We direct the attention of our readers to fact that Turney & Jones of Paris, have commenced receiving their new Fall Stock of Dr. Goods. Their importations will be complete.

We tender our thanks to Calla Magee our obliging and efficient Postmaster, for a late English paper; such courtesies are always appreciated.

J. J. Good the gunsmith, who met with the unfortunate casualty by shooting, has recovered, and removed his shop from his old location to the house on the corner of Pike Street and the Rail-road opposite the Rankin House, where he will promptly attend to all orders in his line.

THE WEST LEXINGTON PRESBYTERY.—This venerable body is now sitting in Cynthiana.

The moderator of last year, Rev. Mr. George, last night gave us a sermon of surpassing eloquence and ability, after which the presidency was organized.

The Rev. Mr. Hays of Frankfort as secretary was directed to call the roll. He thereupon called the names of some ten or fifteen persons as the members present. A Rev. gentleman present suggested that this mode of calling the roll, was not regular. Mr. Hays thought it was. Upon the question being made, it was determined that the roll must be produced. Mr. Hays said that it was left at his lodgings, but that he could and would, if time were given bring it. Time was given. Mr. Hays went and brought in the record of the last Presbytery. Upon its production a Rev. gentleman moved, that now, a new secretary be elected by the presbytery. It was also suggested that regularly a Moderator should now be elected for this session.

This, being agreed to the Rev. Mr. — was elected.

Then the Rev. Mr. George, ex moderator was chosen for Secretary.

The Presbytery then adjourned till Wednesday at 8 o'clock A. M. When the body again convened, after the transaction of some ordinary business, the attention of all present, was arrested by the advent of the Rev. Robert J. Breckinridge who, stepped quietly in and without any pomp, took a seat in the South-west part of the church.

Here in solemn silence he sat for perhaps an hour; meanwhile the ordinary routine of presbyterial business proceeded, when suddenly, but not unexpectedly the great agitator rose from his seat and craving the courtesy of the assemblage took occasion to tell them, that for some reason, connected with the action of the late general assembly they were not a presbytery, but merely an unauthorized assemblage of gentlemen, for some of whom he felt very kindly, but that the true presbytery consisting of Dr. Yerks, Rev. Mr. Hayes, Rev. Dr. — and Dr. Brackinridge would meet at the Rankin House at 12 o'clock, for the purpose of adjourning to meet at Lexington in two or three weeks. The Dr. then withdrew and strange to say, the supposititious presbytery resumed its functions apparently undisturbed by the great event of the day.

The Covington Gift Enterprise, will close and the drawing take place on the 1st of November. Any person desiring Tickets in this Gift can supply themselves at this office.

THE ELECTION.

It is important to recollect, that again, the people will have the privilege of speaking at the Polls, next Saturday.

There is, as all are aware, little or no excitement in connection with this event.

The bayonet is gone, and as we hope forever, from our voting places. No brass-buttoned usurpers of illegal powers dares now say to the Freemen of the district, "vote as we dictate or not at all."

Such is the unanimity of the popular voice that in old Harrison it is hardly known, that the nominee of the democratic party, has any opposition.

When we state that R. B. Carpenter is actually a candidate for Congress in opposition to Harry Ward, we doubtless tell what is news to many of the people.

Carpenter is a man of considerable talent, and if there were no strong objection personally or politically he would be a formidable opponent for our favorite County-man.

Even as matters stand, he will get the entire fanatic vote of the district, and that would be enough to secure his election if the democratic party too confident in its own strength or too indifferent to the result, should stay away from the polls.

Such a thing is very improbable, but it is due to the sacred cause in which are enlisted, that we should warn the people, that their duty is, promptly and overwhelmingly to meet and repel every attack of the common enemy, upon even the out-posts of our position.

Never was there a more important truism than that "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

There are those of our party, who are perhaps a little lukewarm in their support of our candidate.

This is all wrong!

Mr. Ward has given a most unequivocal assurance of his devotion to the doctrines, principles and policy of the democratic party.

He has too great a stake in the future to venture upon a course, of duplicity, for the poor boon of representing this district in Congress for one short year; besides, and more than which, his character, in all the past, has been unspotted with even a charge of dishonesty, whether personal or political. In fact there is no man, whose record is clearer of trickery or flattery in the attributes of fearless frankness.

While he was not our first choice before the Convention at Covington, it is enough for us to know, that he was the first choice of the Convention and stands regularly before the party as its standard bearer.

All recognize his eminent ability. None doubt his devotion to the true interest of the country, and therefore, whatever personal preferences may be, let us all forego them, and with a majority of fifteen hundred, challenge the other Counties of the district to do better.

NI-HOLAS COUNTY ITEMS.

The Typhoid Fever is prevailing to a considerable extent in this county. The wife of Alex. B. Crawford, died on the 1st of September, aged 80 years.

Dr. J. N. Menefee, a practitioner of Medicine for the last sixty years, is not expected to live. He is one of the oldest inhabitants of this county.

Jesse McDaniell, shot and killed a Crane, measuring four and a half feet from tip to tip. It was pure white and quite a show in town.

The Cholera has been raging at Carlisle for some time, but fortunately it is confined to the fourfooted tribe. Rev. Mr. Lark, of the Christian Church, is drawing immense crowds to his church, and quite a number have joined.

W. T. Henry has about finished a magnificent store room, in Carlisle on front street. H. Peckard & Son have leased it for three years for $1,000. J. F. Tureman & Son, are erecting an elegant House for the drug and notion business — It is on Main cross street, adjoining the old Tureman corner.

Mat. Stitt is all right, and the Nicholas Hotel, is all the go in this town. Stitt & McCormack, propose soon to have a party at the Blue Licks.

Jabez.

ATTENTION SIXTH DISTRICT.—James I. Hudnal collector for this district will be in Cynthiana on Monday, September 24th, for the collection of Internal Revenue.

Those interested should be certain to meet him here. Sep. 12, 1866.

For the Cynthiana News.
Paris, Ky., Sep. 8th 1866

DEAR NEWS.—As per promise I eat myself to give you some items relative to our Fair, which have come under my notice for the few days past. The people of this county, are mostly human, and have all the passions and impulses which animate the human heart, as well as all the frailties. I make this remark simply because many believe that the Bourbonites are something more than those from other surrounding counties or States, (Bourbon is a nation.)

Well on last Friday, the weather was disagreeable. It rained nearly all day, but the crowd at the Fair was immense. The amphitheatre was full, and the mud in the arena was deep enough for horses and vehicles to float with but little difficulty. Who entered and drove or rode stock found it any thing but a pleasant task.

The Fair grounds at Paris, have been kept in good condition for the last eight or nine years. Careful attention has been given by the gentleman, who has it in charge, and has seen that nothing which could be saved or made useful by the stockholders during the exhibition, but was saved and it zealously attended to. The grounds have been kept clean, the fence "laid up," and many other matters have been attended to not necessary to mention here. Now all this I understand has been done and charged to Chas. V. Higgins. You must excuse me Mr. Editor for mentioning this affair but I do it because, think Mr. Higgins, has been badly treated. He has given his attention to the Fair grounds, at this place for years, and for what he has done, nothing has ever been given him—neither in money or office, and I give you this to bring him before the Society correctly. He is deserving and worthy, and to permit him to pass without a place in the society, next year, would be ungrateful. Don't you think so Mr. Editor?

Yesterday (Friday) was a heavy day on the Harrison boys and girls. The boys lost their money, and a young lady lost a premium. This occurred in the ring, where a premium of one hundred dollar pitcher was awarded to the lady who could ride on horse-back the best. Three entries were made, — Miss Righter from your county, and Miss Cogar, and Miss Smith, from this county. Every body but the Judges could see that Miss Righter was entitled to the premium. They decided however that Miss Smith should have the blue ribbon, and she received the premium, and Miss Cogar the second premium. Excuse me Mr. Editor, but if I had been a judge, I should most assuredly have given the premium to Miss Cogar and High Rogers, for they were the best looking couple I ever saw in a ring. I rather envied Mr. R. than otherwise, for the lady he rode with looked like a queen. She also received from outside friends two beautiful silver flower baskets, together with bouquets without number. Miss Righter, also received several compliments in the bouquet line, which I thought was very appropriate.

On Friday night the young people enjoyed themselves at the Ball given at the Paris Hotel, and Bourbon House, Messrs Hampton & Wiggin, the affable proprietors, of the Paris Hotel, had a brilliant party. I attended the hop at the Bourbon House. A gay party of people of Bourbon and surrounding counties were in attendance. The music was superb, and the ladies looked better than ever. The effort to please on their part was perfectly enchanting, and the young men, would have made noble knights of the olden times, as claimed, for their gallantry was unexceptionable.

The Belles of the evening were numerous; but one, as has always been the case, formed the grand center of attraction, and that one (you must excuse me Mr. Editor) was Miss McK—, of Columbia, Tennessee.

"Never did Grecian chizel trace
A nymph, a naiad, or a grace,
Of finer form or lovelier face."

I might also mention Miss Bettie T—, of Bourbon, who received much attention — and also, the fascinating Miss F—, of Augusta, Ga. — and that dignified and graceful lady, Miss Sue C—, of Bourbon. There were many others whose names I did not know, who were very gay and handsome.

Col. Robt. Stoner, from Bath, was present, and also Maj. Gen. P. M. B. Young, C. S. A., Augusta, Ga. He commended, I understand a division of Hampton's Cavalry, and our gallant young friend, Capt. Dan Turney.

The dance was continued to a late hour, but weary feet, and heavy eyelids, forced the lads and lassies home. To all appearances they broke up with heavy hearts, many of them regretting that the Fair could not last all the year round—but let me assure you Mr. Editor, that I should be pleased, if they were held but once in five years.

LIGHT EQUAL TO GAS!

PATENT Gas Condensing Burners! Can be used on any Lamp and dispense entirely with Globes or Chimneys.

The flame produced by these burners spreads out similar to that of Gas. The construction is such that the smoke is confined in a Gas condensing chamber, and is wholly converted into flame. The burner does not depend directly upon the wick for its lights, but burns the smoke which is produced therefrom. No trimming of wick is ever required; and also a saving of thirty-three per cent, less oil than Chimney Lamps and produces a more brilliant light than any other burner in the market.
